Whether his characters are collecting fiddleheads in Maine, swapping drinks in a Montreal bar, eating adventurously in New Haven, or speed-boating through stylish Westport, Eric D. Lehman turns words into palpable topography and architecture. In these well crafted stories, people "at the mercy of forces we could never hope to challenge" keep an abiding faith that "no trail followed to its end is useless." Vividly realized individuals confront dilemmas of personality and circumstance, finding themselves redeemed by experience despite unexpected and uninvited outcomes. Reading these stories leaves you feeling as if you've been to these places and met these people.

—David Leff, author of Finding the Last Hungry Heart

—Bill Ectric, author of Tamper and Time Adjusters
